This is a great drawbook to many temperance meetings, the disposition of some one or two speakers to take upthe time of the meeting by long winded harrangues on points already worn threadbare. The success of the Murphy meetings has been in the directly opposite direction, viz: short, pointed and pithy speeches, full of practical experience, tinged as little as possible with long drawn moralizations over the exceeding sinfulness of rum selling.

The strength and power of a temperance speech is in the ability of the speaker to make his hearer scalls how decidedly it is against their interest to contract the habit of drinking, by showing what a drain it is on their pockets, their health and their capacity for useful employment; what a curse it is to their familier; how it deprives them not only of physi-

Eliters Intelligueer
In your issue of to day, is contained an account of a temperance meeting in which Rev. Dr. Have, President of the Washington and J. Herson College, and myself were conspicuous participants. Your account to day was taken from the Observer. I ask you in justice to myself to insert the report of that meeting as given by the Daily training Reporter, the editor of which (Ex Congressum an Moore) was present and reported the meeting himself.

self.

During my brief residence in your city, I spoke once on the subject of temperance. I have a report of that speech before me, which was given by your paper. I said nothing in that speech in regard to signing the piedge, nor did lever publicly or privately speak either, for or against signing the piedge. The You will by inserting the your paper the enclosed, and by correcting your statement of yearerday, place me in my true attitude before the public.

The success of the Murphy meetings at Pittsburgh has been owing to the matter of fact, home-spun experiences of carnest reformed drinkers, who without the graces of oratory have stirred vast masses of people to the very despest depths of sympathy by their plain unvariabled stories. Whenever the movement falls into other hands than those which have thus given it its hold upon the masses, it will die down in public interest and become a tame and humdrum sort of an affair.

One of the most powerful temperance articles that we have seen published is a sample, short stray of statistics from the last United States census, in which the practical writer, discarding the usual prosy routine of moralization, calls attention to the following suggestive and imported and domestic wines is as follows:

It seems by the census of 1870 that there were 140,000 licensed liquors, and imported and domestic wines is as follows:
